

Vincent D'Angelo,

AKA "Violent Vinny" D'Angelo,

AKA "Monday"

Bank Robber and Hostage Herder

You are a professional, career criminal. You've been doing a variety of illegal activities for your entire adult life, and much of your youth as well. Smuggling, drug dealing, running illegal gambling, fencing stolen goods and the occasional liquor store robbery. You enjoy the freedom of being a criminal, and the good living you have after pulling a successful job. But mostly you enjoy the adrenaline rush of pulling a gun on someone, or smashing someone's stuff or otherwise causing havoc.

Once you got sloppy and spent some time in the state penitentiary. This helped you wise up a bit: you have to be careful when you're on the outside. Committing crimes and causing chaos is what you enjoy, and you can't do much of that if you're stuck inside a jail cell. So ever since you got out, you've been more selective in your criminal activities. You only agreed to this job because you were told that the guy in charge, "Thursday", had inside information about the bank. Apparently he used to work for the bank in some way, and so now he has a brilliant secret plan to get out alive after the cops show up.

You've been asking for this plan ever since you signed up for the job, but Thursday's been keeping his mouth shut. The closer it's gotten to the day of the robbery, the more worried you are about what's going on. Why would he keep the plan secret until after you enter the bank, unless he doesn't have a plan? Not knowing much about "Thursday" doesn't calm your nerves any. And you don't know much about the other guy, "Tuesday", either. Apparently, he's the security expert, who might also have worked for the bank before, too. The third guy, "Sunday" doesn't seem to have any specific job at all.

As you enter the bank, you recognize that one of the patrons is "Sketch" Barnes. You knew him in prison. If he recognizes you, that'd be bad shit for you. He might identify you to the cops. You'll have to make sure he doesn't rat you out.

Define your character:

You're criminal scum, but you like to delude yourself into thinking you're a decent human being, by claiming that you have an absolute moral code that you won't break. What is the single line your character wouldn't cross on the job? Not hurting the elderly? Women? Pregnant women? Never lying? Figure out something that your character does that allows him to sleep at night, unmolested by guilt.