Superpowered Agent and Dealmaker

Here's the deal: through a series of mishaps, you wound up with the ability to speak any language. That's not a lot to build a fortune off of, but you have to play with the cards you're dealt, right? And most businesspeople don't have any superpowers at all, so you can only see advantage and opportunity there.

So you have been trying to see how to make this advantageous. So far what you've managed to do is recruit a hapless time travelling Norwegian for you to exploit. You've convinced him to go by the name "Bjorn Yesterday" and are selling him as a superpowered Viking warrior. You're doing your best to get him famous, get him endorsement contracts and advertising deals and talk show spots. Of course, all the proceeds are funneled off to you, but Bjorn has no idea. He doesn't understand much about modern society, and no English whatsoever. Which means you can feed him whatever lies you want.

So it's up to you to make Bjorn look good, and get him to take credit for anything that happens. Guarding Mr. Miracle's will bring him some name recognition, of course. Especially with that reality show camera crew here.

You also hope to find some other hopefuls that you could convince to sign their lives away for fifteen minutes of stardom. Cohort looks like a good target: she's keen on becoming famous. Could she become Bjorn Yesterday's sidekick? Then she might fall under pre-existing trademarks and copyrights already in your name...

Who You Know:

Bjorn Yesterday is your stooge, who thinks you're helping him when you're really ripping him off. You need to keep an eye on him.

Cohort wants to be a sidekick. Why not your indentured servant... er, sidekick?

Cell Phone Guy is the team's leader, but doesn't really have any control.

Cameraman is filming a reality show about Cohort. You hope to use the show to get some fame for Bjorn. Cameraman also sold you some nude beach paparazzi footage of Credenz recently. Maybe you can use that as some leverage on her, somehow.

Nestor is an old washed up has-been. Seaman is his old rival.

Superpower:

Speak Any Language. Also read any language, or a bunch of other things like that. You can even look at encrypted computer files and know what's in them, or program computers without any training at all.

Roleplaying Hook:

Sleazy Deal Maker. You're not to be trusted in bargaining situations, because you take advantage of others whenever possible.
