

Copycat

Wannabe Superhero

All your life, you have been amazed at superheroes. They fly around, have astounding abilities and save the lives of grateful citizens. So that's why you always wanted to be one. The problem, of course, is that to become a superhero you need to be an alien orphan crash landed on earth. Or a scientist whose experiment went wrong. Or empowered by mystical ancient artifacts. None of these are exactly things you can order from a catalogue.

But you kept going to conventions for superhero fans. You know, the folks who dress up in spandex and pretend to have their own superpowers. You had a pretty decent costume, compared to some at the cons, and were proud of it. It wasn't being a superhero, but it seemed to be as close as you'd ever get.

Until you met Changemaker. You were on your way home from a fan gathering, when you ran into another guy dressed in a colorful cape. He wasn't just another fan, though, he was a bona fide superhero, who fought against evil in a genuine superhero team. And when he saw your getup, he naturally assumed you were a real super, too.

There was no way you were going to tell him the truth. By letting him believe you had impressive powers, he brought you to the group and let you hang out with them as they planned their next adventure. The first couple meetings were upstairs at a pizza parlor, but you assume that they were trying to judge your worth before revealing their secret headquarters to you. And it paid off! You got a text message from Cell Phone Guy, the group's leader, with directions to a top-secret location. Which turns out to be a hidden base full of cool crime fighting gear!

This is the best day of your life. You're excited to see all the neat gadgets and trophies the team has acquired from its numerous fights against evil. You just hope you never are actually called on to use your superpowers: after all, you don't really have any.

Who You know:

Changemaker is the guy who brought you into the group, and who you know best. His superpowers involve money, but you've never seen the full extent of his ability. He seems to be acting a little differently tonight, though.

Cell Phone Guy is the leader, and adept at facilitating tactical communications.

Nestor was the star of your favorite comic book as a kid. Maybe you can get his autograph? Wasn't he in a scandal involving hookers and fraud and cocaine and stuff?

Bjorn Yesterday is a time travelling Viking warrior. How cool is that?

Superpowers:

None. You've told people that you can do anything another nearby superhero can do, only better. So far you've carefully avoided having to actually demonstrate this ability. On a game mechanics level, you have the ability to Be Somewhere Else. If there's a situation where someone would want you to use a superpower, you can beat them in a challenge to slip off without anyone noticing anything odd.

Roleplaying:

You're an excited nerd in nerd heaven, man. Play with the cool toys all around you. Tell everyone how Mr. Miracle used the gadgets to defeat weird villains.